My Mothers Hands

Her hands trembled the first time She touched her small bundle. They guided me gently through childhood dreams And mended the clothes that were torn. I love the warm smile she wears every day, And the sweet voice that gently commands.
But I'll always remember through good days and bad, The wonder of my mother's hands.

Sometimes they were gentle and soft as the rain
When she kissed me and tucked me in bed.
Sometimes they were firm as she led me away
From the dangers that lay just ahead,
All the work they have done and the burdens
They have borne I know only God understands.
There is magic and mystery When I think about the wonder of my mother's hands.

How I wish I could help now the hands that helped me.
They are wrinkled and so filled with pain. She sits by her window and dreams of the time She can bake bread and sew once again. I know when she passes from life's rocky shores To more distant beautiful lands She will not be alone for a moment I now,
For God will be holding her hands.
